"Is it a genuine case this time, Ernest?"
said the younger one.
"Why say this time? Have I everowned to a genuine case before?"
"No," replied Charles, "I can't say you

"There is an English proverb about that," said Ernest: "True love never runs smooth," or something to that offect. Fate is against me, and always has been."
"My dear fellow, that is doing fate an injustice. You have had plenty of successes—more than your share."
"It is that I complain of," said Earnest. Had I been accustomed to disappointments, I might bear this one. I have had successes, when I have not caref a straw whether I succeeded or not; now that it is a matter of life and death I am doomed to have my wish unfulfilled."

"But supposing that fate is against you ronce, is it wise to stake happiness on or once, is it wise to stake happi one thing."

Ernest shrugged his shoulders.

"My dear Charles, it is easy for you to philosophical. You do not love Su-"I will if you wish," retorted Charles

"Let us go back to the hotel," said Ernest shortly.
Charles put his hand on his arm.

there anything that I can do to show my sympathy?"
"Yes," said Ernest. "Let us get away from here; that band is too loud, and the people are getting thicker every minute." He took his friend's arm, and they wan-dered slowly down the road that leads to the sands.

There was no one to interrupt them; the only passers-by were tired laborers or their way bome, or an occasional carriage full of tourists, being dragged up the hill

Charles' reply.

"I will, Suzanne, as you know, loves me; I love Suzanne more than life. Do you know why I cannot marry her?"

I've never heard the whole story. She was betrothed before you stepped in, was she not?"

"Now this is the truth about it. Three years ago my elder brother, who was an officer, quarreled with her father. There is doubt whatever that my brother was in the right; the quarrel was forced on him. A duel followed and Suzanne's father was leilled."

"I never heard of that," said Charles "I never heard of that," said Charles in surprise.

"No, it was hushed up, and my brother went to Algiers, where-he died lest year. Scarcely any one knows the real cause of M. Devriere's death. You can easily inapine the two families saw little of each other afterward. It happened, however, that Suzanne and I met in Paris; she was ignorant of the whole story. "And she?"

"I was not indifferent to her. But her aunt came on the scene, saw what was going on, and demanded an interview with me. I granted it, of course. Ste told me that either I must cut off all intercourse with Suzanne or tell her the whole story. I naturally refused to do either. The result was that she told Suzanne herseli."

"Why could she not hold her tongue?" asked Charles angrity, "It was not good start to be so.

It would be a terrible thing to do. So we have separated."
"Do you think her aunt meant to carry ut her threat?

me so. They are to be married next Monday."

"There is then no hope for you?"

"I suppose not," was the sad reply; "yet there is always a chance. She may be braver than she imagines. I shall not despair finally till she is married. If she breaks it off I shall know the reason, and not hing shall separate us then."

serair finally till she is married. If she breaks it off I shall know the reason, and nothing shall separate us then."

"What is it that you wish me to do for you?" asked Charles, bringing the conversation round to practical matters.

"This," said Ernest. "I start to-morrow for England. I cannot stay here, I must travel—do something to try and get rid of the horrible monotony of my ordinary existence. I want you to sond me word directly the marriage is over, or, better still, will you put an advertisement in the English Times! There is a column for that sort of advertisement. Berthin can tell you all about getting it in. Put it ambiguously, so that no one but I can tell what I means. Wherever I may be I shall be able to get a copy of the Times, I should think—especially if I keep where I can get one," he added, with a smile.

"That is more in your old style," said his companion. "Do try and pull yourself together; it's a bitter pill, but all isn't lost because you fail for once in your life."

"You are talking about what yon don't understand," was Ernest's reply. "Let us get back."

Meanwhile Ernest Dumont was approaching Pontorson, where he intended taking the diligence. His only luggage consisted of a small valise. The boats and trains fitted well and the same day that, saw him leave Avranches saw him safely installed in a quiet hotel near Charing Cross. He entered his name as Eugene Dubois.

Now that he was far from all his friends he began to feel the want of them. He had voluntarily expatriated himself; he had intentionally cut himself clear from all his old ties. Not a soul on earth he knew knew where ke was. Few, he thought, sadly enough, would care. He was alone; it had been his wish to be so for weeks past, and now that his wish was fulfilled he was more miscrable than ever.

However, he had enough sense left to know that the only way to prevent time from dragging along interminably was to occupy himself. He had only been in London once before; suppose he were to Both men were full of apologies, for each had been careless. The Englishman, whose name was Seymour, saw at a glance that Ernest was France, and as he knew more glad than he would confess to find a sort of compatriot in the first man he had addressed on equal terms since crossing. The two men chatted for some minutes, till Ernest said he had no further excess for tresspassing on the other's kindness, and the said of the same said of the same said of the said of the same said of the sa

"Why could she not hold her tongue?" asked Charles angrily. "It was not good to spoil more lives."

"She was the dead man's sister. She told Suzanne, and ordered her never to see me again. But we had one more interview. I spent the most terrible hour of my life then."

Charles said nothing. Ernest recovered his calm, which he had for a moment lost.

"She confessed her love for me, but refused to marry me. Her aunt threatened that if she ever saw me again the whole world should know she was going to marry the brother of the man who killed her father. She could not face that."

"Yoor girl!" murmured Charles.
"It would be a terrible thing to do. So the total contents the father was no need to have to clock struck, and they mounted the steps by Waterloo Bridge, preparatory to returning to the hotel.

Theron P. Kentor, editor of Ft. Wayne, Ind., Gazette, writes: "For the past five years have always used Dr. King's New Discovery, for coughs of most severe character, as well as for those of a milder type. It never fails to effect a speedy cure. My friends to whom I have recommended it speak of it in same high terms. Having been cured by it of every cough I have had for five years, I consider it the only reliable and sure cure for Coughs, Colds, etc."

The best evidence of a physician's success is the estimony of his patients. The increasing detestimony of his patients. The increasing demands for my professional services prove that I have deat honorably and fairly with those who have consulted me. I never use a patient's name without permission, though I have many hundred certificates from those whom I have cured after they had been pronounced incusable. A horough medical education with many years hospital experience and familiarity with thempinic agents, a close observance of temperamental peculiarities and strict attention to hygienic management impures success,
